YOGA & DIET FOR A HEALTHY HEART

Heart is the most vital organ of the body. It pumps 7500 litres of blood per day to supply the oxygen and nutrients to all the tissues and organs. It beats 1,00,000 times a day continuously. Heart gets its nourishment through the coronary artery. The blood supply to the heart muscle is restricted/ reduced due to constriction of coronary artery and deposition of fatty plaque or clots in the lumen of this artery. This ultimately results in the development of cardiovascular diseases like angina pectoris, coronary heart disease, heart failure, hypertension, stroke etc., which impose a significant morbidity and mortality. Heart disease is the leading cause of death in India as well as globally. Inspite of greatly improved diagnostic procedures and advancement in treatment modalities, about 15 millions die of heart disease every year. It is a matter of serious concern that the relatively young (30-50 yrs old) professionals, who are at the peak of their career and productivity become victims of angina, hypertension and heart attack. The common symptoms of heart disease are shortness of breath, chest pain radiating to left arm, cold hands and feet, frequent perspiration and fatigue. The most important cause of heart disease is the stress and strain of 'modern life' characterized by hurry, worry and anxiety of fast paced life. Other causes are change in family structure leaving no cushion to deal with one's personal, professional and family problems; forcing the victim to consume the time saving high fat diet, high calorie, nutrient poor junk food supported by sedentary life style, smoking, alcohol, increased automobile use and lack of physical exercise. The scientific and spiritual discipline of yoga is an effective and time tested method for improving our health, as well as for prevention and management of diseases, especially the psychosomatic and life style diseases.

Savasana, yoga-nidra, meditation and slow rhythmic pranayama (nadi-shodhan, anulom-vilom and bhramari) breathing are very effective in calming and relaxing the mind; and promoting the psychosomatic health. Heart patients are sensitive and reactive. Regular yoga practices help to stabilize the mind and make one emotionally balanced. Yogasanas like – tadasana, trikonasana, bhujangasana, ardhamatsayendrasana and dhanurasana strengthen the lung and heart. Diet also plays an important role in the prevention and management of heart disease. Patients with heart disease should increase their intake of Vitamin-C (amla), Vitamin-E (wheat grass and cabbage) and Vitamin-B (whole grain cereals).

Studies have indicated that alfa-alfa, yogurt, garlic and onion can reduce the blood cholesterol level. Apple and grapes also strengthen the heart. The use of salt, sugar, tea and coffee should be restricted. The patient should also avoid white flour products, sweets, chocolates, soft drinks, all hard fats of animal origin (butter, cream and fatty meats) and canned foods in syrup, alcohol and tobacco. The above holistic approach of yoga-meditation and diet is the best method to protect our most precious organ-heart from the deleterious effects of stress and strain of present day life.

IN MEMORIAM: ROKEYA SAKHAWAT HUSSAIN

Rokeya Sakhawat Hussain, a pioneer feminist writer of pre-independence India, is noted for her two feminist utopias Sultana's Dream and Padamarg. Rokeya's depiction of women's question makes her remarkable as she presents two diverse facets of feminism. Rokeya is a pioneer feminist writer of colonial Bengal much ahead of her time. She shares universal vision of patriarchy and emerges as an iconoclast who is at odds with patriarchal subordination. Rokeya's endeavours are not restricted to theory. Practically she did a lot to liberate women from marginalization and oppression. In Sultana's Dream, she rejects the existence of man but in Padamarg her maturity and farsighted vision find expression as she presents that man and woman can co-exist harmoniously. As a third world feminist, Rokeya locates indigenous cultural roots in order to counter colonial feminist discourse. Rokeya strives for the assimilation of local cultural heritage fused with new ideas of the west. She lays bare western ostentation of female liberation in the form of Helen Horace, and glorifies ancient Indian and pristine Islamic civilization for their broad outlook regarding the women: "She was interested in western feminist ideas and aspirations but skeptical and critical of the limitations and obstacles to women's true equality in the west".

Rokeya's rancour towards patriarchal subordination and oppression, as reflected in her two utopias, is the outcome of her own familial situation and experiences in life. Though born into an elite family she was deprived of any schooling due to the orthodoxy prevalent in Muslim society. Rokeya's writings have been labelled as blasphemous and considered an onslaught on Islam. Rokeya, however, grew up in a deeply religious family. The misconception of her texts as blasphemous and secular is due to her denunciation of religious bigotry as well as misogynistic version of Islam. Religion in Rokeya's contemporary society was manipulated by the patriarchy that deprived women of their religious rights. She is best remembered for her feminist endeavours in the field of education, by opening the first school for Muslim girls in the memory of her late husband. The school still exists in Bangladesh and commemorates her feminist spirit.

WITH GRATITUDE

It's the heart of my office – an ordinary table, made of sturdy pine board, built to last. Though it's too small to work, but I always like it that way; I want to read and write Glocal's history on it, the way you read the lines on someone's hand.

The table is the mirror of our office order and disorder; the lunch we eat with our mismatched boxes and spoons; the students discussing issues; the late evening talks of the future. It's where we gather with our friends, as we did recently; we were finishing lunch and sometimes breakfast too, the student's freshly roaming; the brown mug filled with hot tea with the mingled aroma of ginger; colleagues talking and laughing, a circle of human warmth in the chillness of the winter afternoons when the talk with Amir (School of Law) and Kamran (Department of English) unexpectedly turned into discussion and then unmistakable into our arguments; and then, dismally into a newsletter; the last edition of the last winter of 2019. And here it is, truly appreciable on the part of Faizan (IT Department) for showing the colorful ride of Glocal.

Instead, we said goodbye. Amir and Kamran went to their way with a thought of meeting again. I sat at the table alone, staring at the early darkness outside the window, then at my own stubborn face in the table glass; waiting for a new edition of new beginning and a new year, the first quarter and the first edition Newsletter 2020.
